@MedEdChat T1 #meded I'm still feeling like this is new ground for me. When I hear competence I think it implies you have mastered it. Can we ever truly say that about understanding other cultures?

Heather Paladine @paladineh9 hours ago
A1: My understanding is cultural competency is the older idea that you can learn details that will make you knowledgeable about each culture. Humility is understanding that's not possible, every person is different, and openness to understanding #meded <https://t.co/FRrvtxmOi5>

MedEd Chat @mededchat9 hours ago

@AJKleinhex T1 #meded There was a big movement for cultural competency training years ago that seemed to fall flat. Is cultural humility a replacement that is going to be more successful? If so, how?

Stephanie Starr @stephrstarr9 hours ago

T1: Cultural humility (as I understand it) is a willingness to recognize potential cultural barrier in an human interaction. Cultural competency is less favored because it suggests to many a simple threshold can be met that applies to all situations #MedEd <https://t.co/cIzjB48DJe>

A.J. Kleinhexel @ajkleinhex9 hours ago

T1 As with much of the reflective learning that has to happen in #MedEd, a growth mindset is imperative. There has to be room to fail, reflect, integrate new experiences, and develop as an individual.

ADMSEP @admsep8 hours ago

Richard Tran @rb_tran8 hours ago

@MedEdChat A1: "Competency" is outdated. Cultural Humility is ACKNOWLEDGING the fact that we can never truly learn everything about a group's culture, not only is there much variation between cultural expression and identity, but culture is ever-changing as a sociological construct. #MedEd

A.J. Kleinhexel @ajkleinhex8 hours ago

@admsep @StephRStarr T1 We have to first listen — a lot. Then we have to amplify the voices of non-majority cultures. Then, lastly, we have to be willing to try, to make unintentional missteps, and to apologize sincerely when we do. #MedEd

@MedEdChat Competency was stressed in (my) classical #meded, humility is next level... not just tolerating with respect x y z but rearranging your internal framework to manage any future interactions without needing a frame of reference

@nverma21 @Alliance4ClinEd @AJKleinhex @COMSEPediatrics I agree about the need for some confrontation for thoughtful analysis, but when time-pressed and (dis)incentives favor avoidance... #MedEd

@IanJPereira @Alliance4ClinEd @COMSEPediatrics T3 Both good and bad. A couple takeaways: 1) Learning objectives are even more important than usual (and "exposure" doesn't cut it). 2) Don't ask one member of a culture to be the representative for everyone in that culture. #MedEd

RT @admsep: T3: One of our members has developed quite an inventory of books on cultural humility <https://t.co/bGHqLREvsa> #MedEd

@MedEdChat T3 I think Problem based learning, case studies, art, movies, documentaries can all be used in small groups to teach cultural humility. Best done throughout medical training #meded

@GLBDallaghan @IanJPereira @Alliance4ClinEd @COMSEPediatrics @MedEdPORTAL I think the crux of the issue is that both quality and quantity of experiences are important. You can't be humble if you have one experience and think you've got it figured out. You need volume to appreciate nuances. #MedEd

@GLBDallaghan @AJKleinhex @Alliance4ClinEd @COMSEPediatrics I try to do this as part of self-#reflection when trying to understand an unusual encounter, but would not feel comfortable walking in those shoes in front of anyone else. #MedEd T3

@MedEdChat @myheroistrane @tealmeded @BJBRoman CT: With technology changing, the therapeutic relationship may become even more important. This likely includes culture, both how we understand and adapt to it for therapeutic ends. Thanks for the great discussion #MedEd
