@rwillis113 @MedEdChat I guess I am the only “mean” one amongst us! @MedEdChat To mitigate one's own bias in peer review it can be helpful to state your biases (and limitations) outright. Everyone views the world through a particular lens, and it's expected that authors make their lens clear. Why not reviewers too? #mededchat

@debsimpson3 @GLBDallaghan @TLMedEd Totally agree; I guess I just got cynical in my old age. I sometimes have given names of people I wanted to see my work, regardless of whether I thought they would give it a favorable read (was hoping they would, tho). #mededchat

T4 - If I keep peer review goals in sharp focus (to provide rec + constructive feedback on the degree to which manuscript advances what we know in field of #meded) - identifying reviewers is easy: look to who has published in field before; methodology wizards; etc. #MedEdChat

Gary Beck Dallaghan @GLBDallaghan 7 hours ago
