Kristina Dzara, PhD, MMSc @KristinaDzara8 hours ago
@debsimpson3 @olletencate I don't love the idea of quantifying with exact numbers...manuscripts vary. Some are 500 words, others are 40 pages! Not all reviews take the same time or effort. #MedEdChat

@GLBDallaghan @debsimpson3 @Alliance4ClinEd If I don't feel I have enough expertise in a theory used, or methods, I make a note to the editor that they should ensure another reviewer has that expertise to ensure the results are appropriate & robust. Big fan of the "additional notes to editor" review section! #MedEdChat

Ryan Landoll @DrLandoll8 hours ago

I love this idea. I also strongly believe co-reviewing a paper with your graduate students is a win (good exp for them)-win (makes your review easier)-win (I accept more reviews this way)

T2 Indeed portfolio is excellent approach @TLMedEd . Wondering what evidence one would highlight from the reviews to demonstrate a peer reviewer's scholarly value? We've got "quantity" of reviews (easy with pubon - but it's the quality that's trickier for evidence! #MedEdChat

@GLBDallaghan That would be cool. I suppose you could track it yourself - I get emails back from journals regarding the results of my reviews. It would not be hard to start a simple excel spreadsheet, add all reviews, and then when you get that email, update the result. #MedEdChat
